Today I am the winner of a 22 person, 5 dollar entry fee pool at work, here's how it happened;

Before the Monday game I had 12 points, three incorrect picks (I picked Cleveland at home, thinking both teams are awful and it would be a crapshoot; I picked the Jets at home to beat a Philly team that hasn't lived up to expectations; and St. Louis at home, thinking these are teams roughly equal, better go with the home team).

There were two guys with 13 correct picks, but they both picked KC to win the Monday night game, I picked Green Bay. AWESOME. I'm still in this thing.

Three other people had 12 points, and picked Green Bay to win. So we could theoretically bring this thing to a very complicated Monday Night Score tiebreaker. Whoever was closest to the combined score of the game wins the pot. The tie-breakers went

CC: 34 points
E: 42 points
MS: 46 points
B: 51 points
R: 52 points
Me: 60 points

In order to win, I needed Green Bay to win with a combined score of 56 points or more to get anything. I watched that game with great interest. In the fourth quarter KC made it 38-22, and I went nuts. That's 110 dollars in my pocket today
